Racine County

Racine County today announced that new services have been added to the county's Here to Help program, a proactive effort to reach families who are facing barriers to services due to the COVID-19 outbreak. Namely, Racine County is increasing its efforts toward shelter programs by partnering with the Homeless Assistance Leadership Organization (HALO) to support screening of residents in need of shelter. The shelter component is part of a wide-ranging Here to Help program in which staff are proactively reaching out to families who have been involved with county assistance programs to address essential needs during the COVID-19 pandemic such as rent, food, mental health, personal safety and other needs. Residents can also now connect with Here to Help via phone by calling (262) 638-6400, in addition to emailing HereToHelp@racinecounty.com.

Dr. Darrell Williams, Administrator of Wisconsin Emergency Management, toured the Racine County Emergency Operations Center today. Local officials briefed Dr. Williams on Racine County's response to the COVID-19 pandemic.
